

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Introduction	7
Chapter I
Formalisation and Conventionalisation. Concepts and methods	11
1. Introductory Remarks	11
2. The evolution of the conception of conventional acts in jurisprudence	12
2.1. The Conception of Conventional Acts of the Poznan School of Legal Theory	12
2.1.1. Essence of the conception	12
2.1.2. Elaboration of conception	16
2.1.2.1. Elaboration of conception by the Poznan-Szczecin School of Jurisprudence	16
2.1.2.2. The expansion of the conception by Gizbert-Studnicki ...	19
2.2. From the conception of Austin to the linguistic conception of constitutive and regulative rules of Searle	21
2.3. Connotative conception of constitutive rules as construction and consequential rules	25
2.4. Formalisation and conventionalisation—elaboration on the conception of conventional acts in jurisprudence	33
3. Significance of formalisation and conventionalisation concepts for shaping definitions & typologies of acts in criminal proceedings	41
4. Final remarks	43
Chapter II
Definitions and Typologies of Acts in Criminal Proceedings. A critical reflection	45
1. Introductory remarks	45
2. Definitions of acts in criminal proceedings in the light of the conception of formalisation and conventionalisation	46
2.1. General Remarks	46
2.2. Juristic Definitions of the Name ‘Act in Criminal Proceedings’: subject-matter-oriented, party-oriented and mixed	46
2.3. Omission as the material substrate of a formalised cA	56
2.4. Teleological aspect of the definitions of an act in criminal proceedings: ‘bringing about a specific trial effect’ and the illocutionary effect of a formalised cA	59
2.5. Definition of an Act in Criminal Proceedings: intellectual-volitional aspect	64

2.6. Behaviour by a person performing an act in criminal proceedings prompted by his/her will distorted by exogenous factors as the material substrate of a formalised cA	71
2.6.1. General Remarks	71
2.6.2. Review of juristic literature propositions	73
2.6.3. Error and deceit	80
3. Typologies of acts in criminal proceedings approached from the standpoint of the formalisation and conventionalisation conception	88
3.1. General remarks	88
3.2. Juristic literature typologies of acts in criminal proceedings	89
4. Act in criminal proceedings and its product	98
5. Final remarks	102
Chapter III
Acts in Proceedings and the Conception of Criminal-Trial Relation	105
1. Concept of criminal-trial relation	105
1.1. Conception of criminal-trial relation according to Cieślak	105
1.2. Conception of criminal-trial relation according to Ziemiński	108
2. Competence subordination relation in criminal procedural law	111
2.1. Competence subordination relation and competence norm	111
2.2. Criminal trial relation—is it only a competence subordination relation?	117
3. Acts in criminal proceedings as acts joined by mereologic relationships	121
4. Final remarks	124
Conclusion	127
Bibliography	131