Introduction	11
PART ONE	17
CHAPTER 1
Action research beyond EFL pedagogy	17
1.1. Definitional issues	17
1.2. The emergence and development of action research	28
1.2.1. Common sources: Lewin, Collier, Dewey	29
1.2.2. Further developments of action research in the USA	34
1.2.3. Action research in the United Kingdom	36
1.2.4. Action research in Australia	40
1.2.5. Action research in Poland	42
1.3. Typology of action research	44
1.3.1. Experimental / technical approach to action research	44
1.3.2. Practical approach to action research	46
1.3.3. Critical / emancipatory approach to action research	48
1.3.4. Feminist approach to action research	50
1.3.5. Participatory action research (PAR)	52
1.3.6. Postmodern action research practices	55
1.4. Methodology of action research	57
1.4.1. The research process	57
1.4.2. Models of action research	59
1.4.3. Research methods	63
1.4.4. Validity in action research	64
1.4.5. Dissemination of action research	67
CHAPTER 2
The context: EFL teacher development	70
2.1. Teacher knowledge construction	71
2.1.1. Epistemological influences	71

2.1.2. Teacher knowledge	74
2.1.3. The EFL teacher as learner	78
2.2. Reflection – between teacher knowledge, teaching practice and teacher research	79
2.2.1. The concept of reflection	82
2.2.2. Reflection in practice	84
2.3. EFL teacher research competence	88
2.3.1. The concept of teacher research in EFL pedagogy	89
2.3.1.1. Justification of teacher research and constraints	92
2.3.1.2. Contextuality of teacher research	94
2.3.2. EFL teacher engagement in teacher research	94
2.3.2.1. Teacher conceptions of teacher research	95
2.3.2.2. Teacher-researcher self-perception	96
2.3.2.3. Teacher willingness to engage in research	96
2.3.2.4. Teachers conducting research	96
2.3.2.5. Lack of engagement in doing research	98
2.3.2.6. School research culture	98
2.3.2.7. Dissemination of teacher research	99
2.4. Approaches to teacher research	100
2.4.1. Case studies	101
2.4.2. Exploratory practice	103
2.4.3. Narrative inquiry	104
2.4.4. Self-study of teaching	106
 CHAPTER 3
Theorising action research in EFL pedagogy	109
3.1. Defining and describing action research in the EFL pedagogy	109
3.1.1. Locating action research	110
3.1.2. Antecedents of EFL action research	112
3.1.3. Definitions and characteristics	114
3.1.4. Types of action research	121
3.1.5. Approaches to action research in EFL pedagogy	124
3.1.5.1. Block’s adaptation of action research cycle	124
3.1.5.2. Self-organised Learning action research and Increasing Professional Effectiveness action research	125
3.1.5.3. Ethnographic action research	126
3.1.5.4. Soft systems methodology	128
3.2. Functions of action research	129
3.2.1. Teacher professional development	129

3.2.2. Action research as a means of developing reflective practice	131
3.2.3. Action research as a means to promote autonomy	133
3.2.4. Action research as a means to bring about changes	134
3.2.5. Action research as a way of teaching	135
3.2.6. Action research as a research method	135
3.2.7. Action research for a diploma	136
3.3. Writing up action research	138
3.4. Review of research on action research in EFL pedagogy	145
3.4.1. Research themes	145
3.4.1.1. Action research and teacher development	145
3.4.1.2. Action research and collaboration	155
3.4.1.3. Action research and the research context	157
3.4.1.4. Action research and reflection	158
3.4.1.5. Action research – perception and practice	160
3.4.1.6. Reporting action research	162
3.4.1.7. Other issues	164
3.4.2. Methods in research on action research	165
PART TWO	169
CHAPTER 4
The study of action research practice – towards a methodological framework	169
4.1. Rationale for the study	169
4.2. Research focus and framework	171
4.3. Methods	173
4.4. Corpus description	177
CHAPTER 5
Analysis of pre-empirical stage	180
5.1. Method and description of units of analysis	180
5.1.1. The research context	181
5.1.2. Research participants	183
5.1.3. Reasons for the study	184
5.1.4. Research aims	185
5.1.5. Research areas and topics	187
5.2. Results of the analysis	187
5.2.1. The context	187
5.2.2. Research participants	196

5.2.2.1. The researcher	196
5.2.2.2. Other research participants	201
5.2.3. Reasons for undertaking action research	203
5.2.4. Research aims	207
5.2.5. Research areas and topics	210
5.3. Discussion and conclusions	213
5.3.1. The research setting and context details	214
5.3.2. Teachers' interests and action research	216
5.3.3. Reasons and aims	217
 CHAPTER 6
Analysis of empirical stage	219
6.1. Method and description of units of analysis	219
6.1.1. Researchers' conceptualization of action research	220
6.1.2. Justification for action research	221
6.1.3. Research designs	221
6.1.4. Questions and problems	222
6.1.5. Data in action research	224
6.1.6. Usefulness of action research	226
6.1.7. Utilisation of results	226
6.2. Results and discussion	227
6.2.1. The concept of action research	227
6.2.2. Justification for taking up action research	231
6.2.3. Action research designs	233
6.2.3.1. Action research design 1	234
6.2.3.2. Action research design 2	236
6.2.3.3. Action research design 3	237
6.2.3.4. Action research design 4	239
6.2.3.5. Action research design 5	240
6.2.3.6. Action research design 6	242
6.2.3.7. Action research design 7	243
6.2.4. Constructing research questions and problem formulation	245
6.2.5. Data in action research	253
6.2.5.1. Data as an incentive for reflection and action research planning	253
6.2.5.2. Data as grounds for taking action	254
6.2.5.3. Interim data	255
6.2.5.4. Post-intervention data	257
6.2.5.5. Sources of data	257

6.2.6. Researchers' assessment of action research	263
6.2.7. Utilisation of research results	266
6.3. Conclusions	266
CHAPTER 7
Analysis of post-empirical stage	269
7.1. Method and units of analysis	270
7.2. Sections, headings and structure	272
7.2.1. Major sections	272
7.2.2. Standard sections and their headings	279
7.2.3. Action research headings	284
7.2.4. The macro-structure of action research articles	288
7.3. Move representation of action research	291
7.3.1. General information about action research	291
7.3.2. Move representation of actual action research studies	294
7.4. Conclusions	303
CHAPTER 8
Teaching action research	306
8.1. Teaching action research in an EFL context	306
8.1.1. China example	308
8.1.2. Turkey examples	309
8.1.3. Brazilian example	310
8.1.4. Polish example	312
8.1.5. The Hawaiian example	312
8.1.6. Online example	313
8.2. Off-site teaching of action research: a three-year study	314
8.2.1. Rationale and action research module design	315
8.2.2. Adaptation of the evaluation model	322
8.2.3. The course participants	325
8.3. Process evaluation of the action research module – the results	327
8.3.1. Learning about action research	328
8.3.1.1. Initial reflection	328
8.3.1.2. Ways of learning about action research	330
8.3.2. Conducting action research	334
8.3.2.1. Action research projects	334
8.3.2.2. Students' evaluations of the action research projects	335
8.4. Outcome evaluation of the action research module – the results	340
8.4.1. Knowledge about action research	340

8.4.2. Transfer of skills and knowledge about action research	344
8.5. Conclusions	346
CHAPTER 9
General discussion, concluding remarks and further directions	350
9.1. Action research in EFL pedagogy – theoretical consideration	351
9.2. Action research in EFL pedagogy – practical application	355
9.3. Final conclusions and further directions	360
